

A transition to Neurolanguage Communicator

Interview with Philip D Griggs, hypnotherapist, psychotherapist, tutor and facilitator, UK

Can you describe your professional career before taking the neurolanguage communication certification (NLCC)?

I was a Hypnotherapist, Psychotherapist, tutor and facilitator.

“Each level enabled me to support learners in their learning and for them to gain more confidence”

How did you find the course?

It was excellent, pioneering levels in new thinking and coaching. Each level enabled me to support learners in their learning and for them to gain more confidence.

Which highlights or insights did you gain from the NLCC?

Helped me to be become even more aware not to judge or presume someone is thinking something. NLCC helped me to open up conversations with more powerful questions in coaching. Thoroughly enjoyed the coaching sessions 1-1 and online.

“I felt more clarity, self-direction and confidence in approaching difficult questions and situations”

What was the immediate impact on your way of teaching after taking the course?

I was able to reduce teaching styles and introduce more coaching and facilitated methods of learning. Discover how people learn and their preferred learning style in groups, individually, this has helped me to resolve and support people’s issues on a 1-1 level using neurolanguage coaching practices. This course impacted upon the way people need to be in their own power when, discussing, resolving their issues and problem solving without my opinions or views. Supporting people with neurocoaching practices enables clients to experience that their views and experiences are important and real and as the NL coach probe into those deeper questions whilst keeping the limbic system calm.

Were there any impacts on your personal life during or after the course?

Yes, enormously, I felt more clarity, self-direction and confidence in approaching difficult questions and situations.

“Using NLC I support and receive wonderful feedback from learners and clients”

How was your professional development after the course?

I now work in trauma based work for people in desperate life situations. Using NLC I support and receive wonderful feedback from learners and clients who feel they are being listened to and their opinions are valuable and important. This then leads to them finding inner peace and direction in a calm state.

How has the course changed the way you deliver a course?

I set questionnaires, keep class numbers small and work out through coaching and NLP interventions the best learning styles for learners.

“This course has been a breakthrough in learning”

How would you describe the impact you are now having as a neurolanguage communicator on your learners?

Learners feel they are able to express, share and discuss more openly their experiences and concerns. I was doing this already, however I now focus and extend these conversations and observe all levels of their communication.

Is there any additional information that you would like to add?

This course has been a breakthrough in learning. In therapy sessions I encourage clients to lead through their experiences, both enjoy the silences and have noticed how the sessions run so much smoother and how they discover their solutions so much easier. Also, teachers, tutors, coaches and facilitators this course will enable learners to gain more knowledge and strive to reach higher levels, grades and performance.
